WHO WE ARE

The Congress for the New Urbanism (CNU) leads an international movement restoring and building places people love. CNU and its members are dedicated to making and restoring places friendly to walkers and bikers, investing tax dollars more efficiently, improving residents' safety and health, and retaining economic and environmental value.

Now in its 24th year, CNU's annual Congress unites the world's leading experts for four days of education, collaboration, discussion, and debate on the policies, designs, and emerging approaches that create great places.

WHY DETROIT?

Detroit is a lab for 21st century urbanism. The city and its residents have endured the trauma of transformation from an industrial economy to the information age. They have confronted social, political, and economic challenges familiar to many other urban areas, only at a scale and complexity beyond what most could imagine. Now, Detroiters are emerging from that experience as pioneers of innovation at every level from neighborhood to region.

What better place for planners, designers and policymakers to gather, to learn, to share, to celebrate what this work-in-progress is producing? Engage with CNU in Detroit. Together, we will:

- + Showcase the transformational work done by Detroit leaders in business and politics and by neighborhood organizations and individuals
- + Create collaborative experiences for both our national members and local innovators to advance targeted projects in real time
- + Capture, discuss, and expand models worthy of replication in other cities and metros
