Breakout Sessions

Subgroups work on the following subjects for the rest of the day until they report out.

1. Network - Defining, Measuring, and Sustaining: What do we mean by network? What are its principles? What are the key characteristics of a sustainable – as compared to a conventional – network? What are the best ways for us to measure the performance of sustainable transportation networks across all modes and in terms of traditional and alternative measures? What contributions can a sustainable transportation network make to the issue of climate change and the energy crisis? What are the expectations, metrics, and possible research projects desired?
Facilitated by Andrew Gast-Bray and Norman Marshall
2. Network and Place: What are the desired characteristics of transportation networks and the places that they serve that together lead to an urban form consistent with New Urbanist goals and principles? How can we plan networks and places to achieve these characteristics? Facilitated by Phil Erickson and Thomas Kronemeyer
3. Network and Modes: What are the characteristics of a transportation network that supports transit, walking, and bicycling? What are the contributions of transportation networks to integrating transit and land use into a place? What is the relationship between TOD Typologies and Network?
Facilitated by Sam Zimbabwe and David Crossley
4. Network – Implementation Policies and Barriers: What are the critical barriers to implementation of a sustainable network (including Regional Transportation Modeling; Roadway Funding; Regional vs. Local network planning; Subdivision Codes; System vs. Facility planning) and how can they be overcome? Facilitated by Brian Bochner and Marshall Elizer
5. Emergency Responders and the Network: Clarify the relationship between network connectivity and emergency response services update on the CNU/EPA Emergency Response and Street Design Project and work on coding changes.
